Comments on overall assessment of this course.

- Jonny Anomaly represents what the humanities should be. Intelligent, critical, and not afraid to tell you you are wrong. In a world where professors pander to students, Professor Anomaly demands respect and attention.
- Really enjoyed this class! I thought the class discussions were thought provoking. The class was a bit big considering the discussion-based structure, but overall it was one of my favorite classes this semester!
- The class size was too large. In a discussion-based class, it's extremely difficult to have your voice heard (especially when volunteering requires a lot of forethought) when you have to compete with 30 other students to get the chance to speak.
- This course has challenged me intellectually. It has forced me to escape my analytical mind and view the world through a philosophical, economical, and political lens. In keeping an open mind, the course has encouraged me beyond my comfort zone of thought. The course material has not only enabled me to form opinions about current issues, but it has enabled me to justify my beliefs.
- This is the second PPE course I have taken with Prof. Anomaly, and unfortunately, it will probably be my last. Anomaly is an extremely effective instructor and is able to facilitate level-headed, rigorous discussions even on the most controversial topics. This probably sounds like pandering, but I felt like I grew intellectually during every class.
- When I registered for this course I was unaware that I would have to travel to Duke for over half of the semester. If I have to travel to another campus for a class I should not have to pay $3 each way to take the Robertson bus. Especially since Professor Anomaly decided that that the Duke students did not need to travel to UNC after spring break. Duke students do not have to pay for their Robertson passes so I think it would have been more fair if they had had to travel to UNC.
